Location: OHSU, Collaborative Life Sciences Building, Room 1S018
2730 SW Moody Ave. Portland, OR 97201

Presented by Robin Baker - Ph.D Candidate

Historically, behavioral and primary healthcare services have been provided in separate silos within systems that do not communicate or do so poorly. This talk will describe the separate systems that are responsible for both behavioral and primary healthcare services and evaluate how the lack of communication between these systems leads to poorer health outcomes and higher costs. Since the integration of primary and behavioral healthcare systems is touted as one of the most promising approaches for improving the delivery of healthcare, it is important that we learn from past mistakes.

Robin Baker is currently a Ph.D candidate, Adjunct Instructor, and Research Associate in the OHSU-PSU School of Public Health. Her research interests are in the integration of primary care and behavioral health and the organizational and cultural factors that impact the implementation of integrated services.

Sponsored by Oregon MPH Program and the CDC-funded Prevention Research Center, the Center for Healthy Communities at OHSU
